Searching for the School Tortoise

Yesterday, my teachers, my classmate, Hector and I went to look for the tortoise. At first, Hector and I didn't go with my teachers, but when we heard that they were going to find Bao Bei, our school tortoise, we decided to go with them. The weather was cloudy. We found some tortoise's excrement at the country park's gate because Mr. Ko said the tortoise would go to some places that had trees, so we went to the country park.

Miss Kung was looking at the photos that the police officer, Miss So, gave her while Mr. Ng was driving.

Hector said, "Bao Bei may hide in the hole in this country park."

"It may hide under a tree," I said.

We didn't listen to each other's opinion, so we made our decision by doing rock-paper-scissors to find out where to search first. I won. Miss Shui was taking a nap while Mr. Ko was reading the map. Miss Shui was sleeping because she was marking 5C's writing all night, so she did not sleep well.

Not long after, it started to rain. We couldn't see clearly. Suddenly, we crashed into a tree. Mr. Ng wanted to run the car again, but the engine was broken. My eyes were wide open with fright and Hector's mouth was opened in horror.

"Are we going to die? I don't want to die!" Hector cried loudly.

"Don't worry, Hector. I'll call the police," Miss Kung replied.

Finally, the police found us and we were safe. While we were walking back to school, we found Bao Bei. It was eating under the tree. We were so excited to see it. We took it back to school and put it in the little garden of the school. We were happy.
